Buying a better camera doesn't mean your pictures will automatically improve! So why not invest a little in learning how to take better photographs? Our one day course will teach you how to make the best of the equipment you have. You don't need an expensive camera and additional equipment to get a good photograph. A good eye is your best asset and that comes with training and practise.

Our one day course consists of three sections.

Basic photographic theory

In this session we examine the three factors that gives us a correct exposure, film/sensor speed, apertures and shutter speed and more importantly the practical impact they have on our images. A good understanding of this aspect of photography is vital to get a good image.

Composition and lighting

The second main section of the course goes through the two factors that can make or break an image. Firstly lighting, the quantity and quality of available lighting, together with the different light sources we tend to have available when taking family images. Secondly we then discuss composition, there are guidelines here that can really make a difference.

Preparing and executing a shoot

Handling the people you want to photograph can be very daunting (particularly if they are members of your own family). The course includes tips on how to prepare and execute a successful shoot.

Your tutor will be James Barry, a full time professional portrait & wedding photographer, a qualified member of the British Institute of Professional Photographers & the Master Photographers Association.
